

Small courtyard solar powered sphere

Concentrated solar power (CSP) plants rely on complex and expensive tracking systems to follow the sun and maximise conversion efficiency. Lots of little ...

IMO, picking a sphere design should come from the purpose you want for it. If it's just to get sufficient power / photons to reach "Mission Accomplished", that doesn't need much optimization. If you're shooting for that 1 TW power generated accomplishment, you'll need a dense mesh of nodes, probably multiple layers, and a large / luminous star.

They look like they're mixing a curious potion, but really it's just solar-powered streams. Light polyresin means it's easy to move, so you can pick and choose your favourite small-space spot. Nilaus has a planetary solar power blueprint that I use when setting up solar on planets when I'm expanding. It works wonders. Uses close to 1000 solar panels and about 5 wireless charging towers. Great power for early-mid game power needs on a new planet. Only reason I needed to add onto it was when I was had more than 6 or 8 ILS on the planet.
